

Women's Studies: Second Summer Institute and Minor Component

Sir George Williams Campus
Concordia University
Montreal, Quebec

Summer Institute in Women's Studies July 2 - August 12, 1975

Scope

The summer institute will continue our program in Women's Studies. This program is based on the recognition that the systematic study of women has been neglected by all academic disciplines. Courses will deal with women's history as well as recent research which has been stimulated in the social sciences and other areas.

Structurally, courses will be offered within particular disciplines as well as in the Centre for Interdisciplinary Studies. The summer institute complements the regular program in Women's Studies in that it exposes students to well known personalities, writers, and academics who are not presently part of Concordia University.

Courses

Interdisciplinary Studies N-261

Women in Antiquity I

This course will study women's situation from Bronze age matriarchy to archaic Greece up to 500 B.C. Attention will be given to the civilizations of Crete, Egypt, and Mesopotamia. (3 credits)

Interdisciplinary Studies N-262

Women in Antiquity II

This course will focus on women's situation in classical Greece and Rome. Attention will be given to the Etruscans, Celts, and the position of women in classical Judaism and early Christianity. (3 credits)

Time: Monday through Thursday 4:00 - 6:00 p.m.

Instructor: Sylvia Barnard, (Ph. D.), State University of New York, Albany.

Dr. Barnard is an Assistant Professor of Classics, having received her education at McGill, Cambridge and Yale. She is the author of The Timeless Forest (McGill Poetry Series), has worked on studies of Ammianus Marcellimus and has recently submitted a section for a reader on women in European history.

History N-328

Women in Western History

A review of the position and roles of women in Western History prior to the 17th century. Beginning with the 17th century, a more detailed discussion of these themes and close scrutiny of selected problems having to do with the roles of women in Europe, Canada and the United States during the last two centuries. Among the problems treated will be the history of the Feminist movements, the relationship of women to the process of industrialization and the impact of the world wars of this century on the condition of women. (6 credits)

Jointly offered by the History Department and Women's Studies.

Time: Monday through Thursday 8:30 - 10:25 p.m.

Instructor: Jean L'Esperance. (M.A.), Essex University, Great Britain.

Professor L'Esperance is completing her Ph.D. for McGill University. She is presently teaching "The History and Sociology of the Family" as a special subject in social history at the University of Essex. She is the author of several articles including "Resources for Women's History in London" Womens Studies, and "Middle Class Women, Working-class Men and Working-class Women: A Case Study of the Campaign to Repeal the Contagious Diseases Act" Bulletin of the Society for the Study of Labour History.

Sociology N-458

The Sociology of Sex Roles

Prerequisite: Sociology N-001, N-111, N-211, N-210 or one introductory Sociology course at the university level.

This course will focus on sociological aspects of roles. Modern social trends will be analysed, with special attention to emerging egalitarian patterns and changes in the socio-economic system. (6 credits)

Time: Monday through Thursday 6:15 - 8:10 p.m.

Instructor: Marylee Stephenson, (Ph.D.), McMaster University

Professor Stephenson is presently teaching courses on the status and role of women in Canada, on socialization, and on the sociology of sex at McMaster University. She is editor of the book Women in Canada (1973).
